On April 19, 1995, Timothy McVeigh, a former soldier deeply influenced by the literature and ideas of the Christian extremist white supremacist Alt Right, parked a Ryder truck with a five-ton fertilizer bomb in front of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal building in Oklahoma City. Moments later, 168 people were killed and 675 were injured in the blast. This is the worst case of domestic terrorism in U.S. history ... so far.
